HEALTH WATCH

How to talk to a sick friend

Whether your friend is suffering from the coronavirus, cancer, or just a bad cold, you want to be there for him or her. But what should you say to offer real comfort? The Healthline website offers this advice for sharing just the right words:

- Talk to the person, not the disease. Your friend or loved one is already dealing with sickness day in and day out. They may need a break. It's OK to ask how they're feeling and what they're doing to take care of themselves, but don't dwell on the illness exclusively. Talk about other subjects.
- Be sensitive. Don't pry or press for details. If you're a caretaker, pay attention to the person's moods and preferences. You may have to press for information that the person is reluctant to share for fear of taking up your time, or other reasons, but be respectful of their boundaries.
- Be patient. Your friend may not have time to talk right away, or may need a few minutes—or hours—to sort through his or her feelings before answering a question or responding to a text. Don't expect an instant response. Give them space to process their emotions on their own terms.

This space object is really far out

The most distant object in our solar system is far out—literally. The Science Daily website reports that an object about 450 miles across has been dubbed Farfarout by the International Astronomical Union.

Astronomers first noticed Farfarout in 2018, but couldn't determine its distance from the sun. Observations over several years showed that it currently is 132 astronomical units (AU) from the sun. (The Earth is one AU from the sun.) For comparison, Pluto's orbit is only 29 AU from the sun on average. Farfarout's thousand-year orbit around the sun takes it as far as 175 AU away at its most distant, and 27 AU when it's closest, drifting inside the orbit of Neptune.

Farfarout replaces the previous long-distance record holder, aptly named Farout, which is 124 AU from the sun.

It's up to you today to start making healthy choices. Not choices that are just healthy for your body, but healthy for your mind.

Mysteries of the largest black hole

It's the biggest and oldest black hole ever discovered. And it's nowhere near close to giving up all its secrets, according to the Science News website.

The black hole, J0313-1806, has a mass equal to 1.6 billion suns. It's at the center of a galaxy more than 1.3 billion light-years from Earth, and it comes from a time when the universe was only 670 billion years old—about five percent of its age now.

How did it get so large? That's the mystery. Supermassive black holes—also known as quasars—are typically thought to grow from smaller black holes pulling in matter. However, astronomers estimate that if this quasar formed right after the universe's oldest stars and grew as fast as possible, it would have needed to start out with at least 10,000 times the mass of the sun. Collapsing stars that form black holes, though are thought to only create quasars around a few thousand times the mass of our sun.

Scientists theorize that a huge black hole could have formed from the collapse of primordial hydrogen gas in vast amounts. On the other hand, this black hole could have been produced by stellar collapse and grown more quickly than previously thought.

Which explanation is correct? Scientists will have to look further back through time toward the birth of the universe for smaller black holes and measure how they grow.

Yikes! Electric eels hunt in packs

Imagine fleeing from an electric eel. Pretty scary, right? Now imagine trying to escape a pack of them.

It's not a horror movie (yet). But The New York Times reports that scientists have discovered that eels, long considered to be loners of the deep, actually congregate in packs to hunt other fish. The behavior was actually first observed in 2013, when a Brazilian diver exploring an Amazon waterway came upon a “writhing mass” of 100 or more eels ganging up to prey on a group of tetra fish. The eels nudged them into tight balls and then hit them with a series of synchronized shocks.

The discovery was confirmed by other researchers and recently written up in a scientific journal. The eels have been identified as the Volta electric eel, which can grow to eight feet long and deliver a shock of 860 volts. Ten of them working together could produce enough electricity to power 100 light bulbs. Researchers speculate that they coordinate their attacks by communicating with low-voltage energy discharges.

Last will

Robert went to a lawyer and said, "I'd like to make a will, but I don't know exactly how to go about it."

The lawyer smiled at Robert and replied, "Not a problem, just leave everything to me."

Robert looked upset. "I knew you were going to take a big portion, but I would like to leave a little to my family, too!"

Happy landing

An airline had a policy that required the pilot to stand at the door while the passengers exited, smile, and say, "Thanks for flying with our airline!" The landing on one particular flight was particularly rough, and the pilot had difficulty looking the passengers in the eye, expecting that one or two would have a smart comment for him. However, it seemed that all the passengers were too shaken to say anything.

Finally, everyone had gotten off except for one little old lady walking with a cane. At the door she said, "Sonny, mind if I ask you a question?"

"Why, no, ma'am," said the pilot. "What is it?"

The woman said, "Did we land or were we shot down?"

"...I am so happy with my new windows...I'd like to commend your work crew. Earbie and Larry were fantastic! I couldn't believe the clean-up EVERYDAY! The whole job took just a week even with all the rain delays. I would and WILL highly recommend your company to my friends and neighbors. Of course I won't need to say a word - the house is doing all the talking! Thank you so much for my beautiful new house."
