If you love tech, you might want to steer clear of Green Bank, West Virginia. The small town of 143 residents has banned Wi-Fi and all other wireless signals, meaning there's no cell service either.

The reason for radio silence? Green Bank is home to the Green Bank Observatory, the first national astronomical observatory in the U.S. and home to the world's largest fully steerable radio telescope. The equipment is extremely sensitive to interference, so in 1958, the government established the National Radio Quiet Zone, a 13,000-square mile area surrounding the observatory. Those who live within a 10-mile radius (which includes the town of Green Bank) can't use bluetooth or even microwaves, unless they are in a special box that blocks electromagnetic fields.

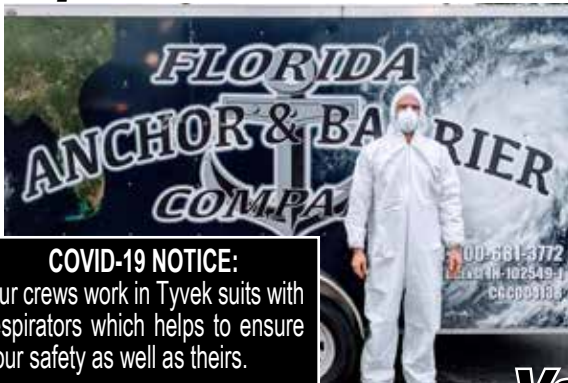

Living in Green Bank is a bit like traveling back in time — paper maps, phone booths, and freedom from many of our modern-day technological distractions.

The strange case of The Strange Case

Most of us are familiar with the story of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, in which a mild-mannered scientist transforms into a hideous, beastlike villain. The story behind the story is less dramatic, but also fascinating.

Robert Louis Stevenson (1850-1894) had long been interested in the relationship between good and evil. One night his wife woke him in the middle of a nightmare, and he told her he'd been dreaming about a man turning into a monster. That became the genesis of the tale.

Stevenson wrote his story at a feverish pace, finishing a draft in about three days. As was his custom, he gave it to his wife for comments. She returned the pages saying that the tale was really an allegory, not a straightforward story. He took her advice to heart—so much so that he burned his first draft so he could revise it without relying on his previous version at all.

The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde was an immediate success, spawning plays and movies devoted to the concept of two diametrically opposed personalities in the body of a single person.

The least deserving may be in the most need

A Zen master invited pupils for a gathering devoted to study and meditation for many weeks. One day a student was caught stealing from the others, and the matter was brought before the master. They insisted the thief be expelled, but the master declined and the student remained.

Several days later the thief was caught again, but once again the master refused to take action. Now the rest of the students were angry, and they drew up a petition demanding the dishonest one be thrown out. They presented their petition and waited for the response.

The master replied calmly, “You are all wise brothers who know what is right and what is not right. You may go anywhere to study if you wish. But this poor brother does not know right from wrong. Who will teach him if I do not?”

There is no doubt fiction makes a better job of the truth.
—Doris Lessing

Check your assumptions

Dr. Herbert L. Tanenbaum shares many stories about his years as a cardiologist in his book Out of the Doctor's Bag (Beckham). One of them highlights the need to question assumptions carefully:

A doctor teaching medical students posed a diagnostic problem to his class. A patient reported that his urine was green — what could cause such an unusual symptom? The students were stumped, since nothing seemed to account for the strange coloration.

Finally the doctor revealed the answer: The patient was actually color blind, and couldn't distinguish between green and red. He was thus passing blood, but mistook it for the wrong color.

Believe in yourself

Motivational speaker Brian Tracy likes to tell a story about a young man who graduated from a small-town high school with high grades. He applied to the state university, took the required aptitude test, and was accepted.

But during his first semester, the young man failed every course. His counselor finally brought him in for a meeting. “What seems to be the problem?”

“I can't do the work,” the young man said. “My IQ is only 99. That's what it said in my admission letter.”

The counselor pulled up the young man's file. “No, this score of 99 puts you in the 99th percentile. That means that you scored equal to or higher than 99 percent of all the students in the country who took this test. You're one of the brightest students on this campus.”

The young man stayed in school and graduated in the top 10 of his class.

Every great love starts with a great story.

Stretch your mind with these fictional languages

Learning a foreign language can change the way you think about words, feel about other people, and view the world around you. The language doesn't even have to be real. Take a look at these invented languages from books and films, as shared on the Mother Nature Network website:

Language: Dothraki

Origin: Game of Thrones (TV series)

Based on George R.R. Martin's epic fantasy series A Song of Ice and Fire, the HBO series created its own language for the nomadic race led by Daenerys Targaryen.

Sample phrases:

- Asshekhqoyi vezhvena!: Happy birthday!
- Yer affesi anni: You make me itch

Language: Nadsat

Origin: A Clockwork Orange, by Anthony Burgess

Burgess' dystopian novel was turned into a film by Stanley Kubrick, retaining much of the futuristic Russian-influenced slang from the book.

Sample words:

- Nadsat: teenage
- Neezhnies: underpants
- Moloko: milk

Language: Na'vi

Origin: Avatar (film)

James Cameron's 2009 science fiction epic introduced the world to the alien Na'vi, along with their fictional language.

Sample words/phrases:

- Atokirina: seeds of a great tree
- Tawtute: human

Language: Newspeak

Origin: 1984, by George Orwell

The definitive novel of an authoritarian dystopia, 1984 introduced readers to a world of constant surveillance, state control, and "Big Brother."

Sample words:

- Joycamp: forced labor camp
- Ungood: bad

Curiosity about life in all of its aspects, I think, is still the secret of great creative people.
—Leo Burnett

The perils of taking a bath

At the end of a long, stressful day, Allison decided to take a nice relaxing bath. Just as she was settling into the water, her doorbell rang. Because she lived alone, no one else could answer it, and after repeated ringing she got up, put on a robe, and went downstairs.

The caller turned out to be a salesperson, and Allison quickly sent him away. Running some fresh hot water, she returned to her bath, only to be interrupted by the phone. Frustrated and more stressed than ever, she once again tried to lie in the tub, but two minutes later the doorbell rang again.

This time Allison slipped in some water on the bathroom tile and fell down hard. Staggering downstairs in pain, she tripped and tumbled the last few steps. Whoever had rung her doorbell was gone. Aching, Allison managed to climb back upstairs, get dressed, and hobble back down and outside to take a cab to the emergency room.

The doctor checked her over. “There’s no serious injury,” he assured Allison. “You just need to get some rest. How about a nice hot bath?”

The big swindle

One evening back when newsboys were a common sight on the streets of every city, one enterprising young lad dropped his stack of papers on the corner and started yelling: “Fifty businessmen swindled! Read all about it! Fifty businessmen swindled!”

A businessman promptly handed the boy a nickel and scanned the front page. Perplexed, he quickly skimmed the rest of the paper. “Hey,” he demanded, “there’s nothing in here about a big swindle!”

“Read all about it!” the newsboy cried. “Fifty-one businessmen swindled!”

I am thankful for laughter, except when milk comes out of my nose.
